Comic-based Education and Evaluation

Educators need new tools to teach and evaluate in the age of digital natives and elearning. Branching interactive graphic stories are a great way to deeply engage learners, making decisions for a character and seeing the outcome—good or bad.

Comic-BEE lets educators rapidly create branching interactive web comics that convey valuable lessons on any topic without need for artists, writers, or programmers.

Comic-BEE gives learners the opportunity to make decisions and control the flow of the story, so they quickly learn the consequences of those decisions.

Comic-BEE's scoring capability supports evaluation and assessment of diverse concepts and skills.

Education, evaluation, assessment, skills practice...

Graphic stories are great for teaching or assessing understanding on any topic, such as STEAM, ethics, history, communications, cybersecurity, law, and more.

Education & Practice

Help learners understand abstract concepts or strategic thinking about tradeoffs and what-ifs

Learn by reading a comic and exploring different outcomes, or by creating a comic

Engage all ages and abilities, from K-12 to university classrooms, beginner to advanced

Students in classrooms, libraries, or camps can be anonymous—no personal information required

Evaluation & Assessment

Easily repurpose curricular materials from exploratory learning to assessment

Built-in scoring system and metrics aid assessment of understanding and ability

Unique access codes allow anonymous evaluations in Comic-BEE. No personal data is collected, and only evaluators need accounts

Why Comic-BEE?
